Book Shares A Collection Of Emails About a Victorious Cancer Journey

Author Michele Buonocore's collection of e-mails to family and friends as she leads a successful fight against cancer

NAPLES, Fla. – Cancer is one dreaded disease that everyone doesn't want to have. Surely, it's something really hard to accept and it can even leave a person devastated. But once cancer strikes, there's nothing else to do but to fight and survive it. In Letters from Houston, author Michele Buonocore tells her journey, rising to the occasion, and surviving this dreaded disease in a collection of e-mails that she would write to a large following of friends while undergoing treatment.

Buonocore feels that it is important to share her full story in this book because she believes that there is a lot to be learned from all that she had experienced throughout her journey living with cancer. She describes in each of the letters how she felt and what she felt while undergoing chemotherapy. She shares her spiritual growth and tells stories of her observations of patients, young and old.

The stories she tells in this book are very real life stories, with great feelings for the people she speaks of. There are stories about Houston, the people, and her love for the homes in Galveston. She also did little road trips with her beloved husband George, and she tells of the places and the people they discovered on their adventures.

Letters from Houston is an emotionally inspiring book of this amazing grandmother/mother's thoughts, recipes and ability to learn new ways while undergoing such a challenging time in her life. She learns through prayers and spiritual growth to become a far wiser, healthier person at the completion of her treatments at MD Anderson and to begin her life of faith and hope for a new beginning. After courageously overcoming and successfully surviving the toughest challenge she had to face and accept in her life so far. Her journey is not only about getting well, but also about how to stay well. She was able to take something that appears so bad and make it so good.
